PERSONAL.

—W. D. Howell is writing a novel, the scene of which is laid in Canada.

—Gerald Massey thinks Edgar was the grandest writing medium the world ever saw.

—Rev. De Witt Talmadge, the clerical mountebank, has gone to Europe to recuperate.

—Richard Wagner rejoices in the possession of claims for libel damages against nine German papers.

—The Philadelphia Press is free to declare that Grant has no magnetism. His friends should present him with some.

—Dollinger and Liebig are the two greatest men produced by the Munich university, which has recently been taking an account of stock.

—M. Mollier, the last survivor of the famous wreck of La Medusa, is dead, aged seventy-seven. He is an officer of the Legion of Honor.

—B. G. Northrup, the recently appointed superintendent of public instruction in Japan, is to take with him fifty of the best teachers he can find in America.

—The French Countess de Mecolli, whose husband was killed near Pata in the late war, has taken the veil as a sister of charity. She was once a reigning beauty.

—M. Thiers has given a tobacco shop worth 4,000 francs annually to Madame Chaudet, the widow of M. Chaudet, one of the hostages shot by the Communists. The assembly had refused to grant her a pension because her husband was a Republican.

—A letter from the Tip Top House, Mount Washington, says: "Any one desiring a cool and cheap summer's residence may find it on Mount Washington; terms, $5 per day; thermometer 32 degrees."

—M. D. Conway says that the persecution of the French artist Coubert has done him no harm, for his pictures rejected by Salon have brought larger prices than any he ever painted before.

—The degree of LL. D. was conferred upon Captain James B. Eads, at the last commencement of the State University of Missouri, on account of the wonderful skill and science which he has exhibited in the construction of the bridge over the Mississippi, and which has attracted the admiration of the first scientists of Europe as well as in America.

—Dupont, one of the communists now lying in prison at Satory under sentence of death, lately attempted to commit suicide by boiling oil in his brains against the prison wall, and very nearly succeeded.

It is one of the worst features connected with these executions that those sentenced to death never know till they are called out when they will be shot.

—Mr. Seward is making rapid progress in his narrative of his journey round the world. He has got through Asia and Africa, and is now writing the account of his visit to Switzerland. The latter part of the work will contain his general reflections on the countries he has seen, and a summing up of his comparison of different races and nations, which, from a man of his ability and experience, can hardly fail to be highly instructive and interesting.

THE GIGANTIC ROBBERIES AT WASHINGTON.
 [From the Cincinnati Enquirer.]

Every effort has been made by honest men in Congress to examine into the condition of the United States Treasury, but they have been defeated, either by being plumply refused the inspection desired or by the appointment of committees who, in the interest of the treasury, would cover up and conceal every thing by false report to the house of representatives. That there have been robberies perpetrated there to the extent of tens of millions of dollars, of millions of dollars, that there have been all sorts of frauds and financial rascality does not rest upon mere suspicion or conjecture. It is foreshadowed and developed in the contradictory reports purporting to give the condition of the treasury. Take this specimen of it:

In the finance report of 1869, page 29, Mr. Boutwell states the public debt, on June 30th, 1869, to be $256,659,959.73. The monthly statement, July 1, 1869, signed by Mr. Boutwell, gives the debt on that day $2,645,170,294.16. In the finance report for 1870, page 25, Mr. Boutwell states the total debt for June 30, 1869, at $2,588,452,212.94.

It will be seen that these statements vary as to the amount of the national debt on the same day no less than sixty-eight million dollars. What would a merchant do with a book-keeper who should give him three different balance sheets, the difference being important in regard to the reduction of his debt on a certain day? He would either think that it was done for the purpose of covering up fraud, or else that he had trusted his books to an ignorant and unskillful party. It is evident that Boutwell cannot, for some reason or other, balance his accounts.

Unless we have been a vast amount of true, and which is false, we cannot estimate the amount of the reduction of the debt. We in any event have a margin of sixty-eight millions. It may be that amount more; it may be that amount less. Boutwell and the friends of the administration choose to take out report which shows the reduction to be the greatest.

But there are further disagreements. On page 276 of the financial report of 1870, Mr. Allison, the registrar of the treasury, certifies that the debt, on July 1, 1869, was $2,489,000,000. He therefore differed with the secretary of the treasury in his estimate of $2,588,452,212.94. Now, is it not about time that we had a committee of experts to investigate Mr. Boutwell's accounts and find out where and what is the trouble?

This evidence, conclusive as it is, is that there has been a vast amount of stealing, is not the most ugly feature of the business. Last winter, in congress, these facts were brought out, and the partisans of Grant were unable to explain them. But they went to work after the fashion of a dishonest book-keeper, who hides his stealing by false entries in the accounts. They declared that for the last year there should be an agreement between the secretary, Mr. Boutwell, and the registrar, Mr. Allison. Here they got into trouble they had not thought of. They made Allison contradict his former reports as to the public debt for the last ten years. Read the following:

Years.	Finance Report 1870.	Finance Report 1871.
1861	$1,890,867,828.68	$900,560,873.72
1862	$1,211,371.92	$24,176,412.13
1863	$1,211,371.92	$1,119,712,128.63
1864	$1,740,980,489.49	$1,812,784,270.57
1865	$2,082,563,026.53	$2,080,647,869.74
1866	$2,745,125,979.21	$2,774,226,173.69
1867	$2,092,196,215.12	$2,076,129,161.87
1868	$2,629,220,044.67	$2,611,067,851.19
1869	$2,489,000,000.00	$2,489,000,000.00
1870	$2,489,000,000.00	$2,489,000,000.00

THE REV. HUGHY STOWELL BROWN.
 [From the New York Herald, 20th, inst.]

The Rev. Hugh Stowell Brown, of Liverpool, England, arrived in this city this morning at eleven o'clock. His arrival was expected on the previous day, and arrangements had been made to give him a reception at the Fifth avenue hotel, but he was of course unable to meet his friends. He was advertised to preach in the Seventeenth street Baptist church in this city yesterday afternoon, and in the evening at the Central church, Brooklyn.

Both of these churches, however, were full, and the large congregations that had the privilege of listening to him. His Sunday afternoon lectures to workmen have brought him into a wide-world popularity. They have been printed and widely circulated in this country. They bear the mark of scholarship, eloquence and devout purpose. They are devoid of everything pedantic, high-down, professional, or vulgar. Yet they have been eagerly listened to by the roughest and poorest classes of Liverpool. One of their chief attractions is the happy and original philosophy. He carries the sayings common among the people, and saddles them with sound, wholesome lessons. Their titles betoken their contents. Some of them are as follows: "The Devil's Mead is All Bane." In this lecture he shows how things are run in this world, and how the rich oppress the poor.

Another bears the title, "There's Nae Luck About the House," in which he shows the true nature and conditions of property. Another is called "Penny Wise and Pound Foolish," treating on the folly of the man who obtains a penny for the loss of a pound. Others are labeled "Stop Thief," "Five Shillings and Costs," "Taking Care of No. 1," &c. In these lectures he deals with the most difficult subjects in the most interesting way, and with the lowest forms of vice so that no one can mistake his meaning. He is applauded at his way of treating the subject.

A DISTINGUISHED JOURNALIST DYING.
 (New York Correspondence Chicago Tribune.)

The friends of Manton Marble, of the "World," will regret to learn that his health, for a long while seriously impaired, is growing worse instead of better. The exact nature of his disease does not seem to be known. He appears, as I understand, to be completely broken down; and his physicians have no hope of his recovery, and indeed, fear that he can not live six months longer. It is fully a year since he has been able to do any editorial work, and he has been confined to his house for some time past. Mr. Marble is still young—little more than forty—and has had a sudden and rapid rise in journalism, that is, in a very short time, he has achieved it. It is hardly twelve years since he was employed upon the "Evening Post" of this city, at a salary of twenty-five dollars a week, and for three years he has been the sole controller and owner of the "World," now become a very handsome property. If Mr. Marble should die, as is generally feared, his newspaper will, doubtless, be offered for sale, as he is a widower, and, I believe, without children, or near relatives to whom it would be likely to bequeathed the journal. It is informed that George W. Childs, of Philadelphia, has his eye upon the "World," and hopes to purchase it, in the event of Mr. Marble's decease. If the melancholy apprehensions felt in regard to the latter gentleman's health be verified, he will be the third editor of the great morning quarterly who have passed away within the last few years. Henry J. Raymond, James Gordon Bennett, and Manton Marble; leaving as survivors only Horace Greeley, who bids fair to have twenty years of valuable work in him yet.—N. Y. Cor. Chicago Tribune.
